nurturing a love of reading opens a universe of possibilities for children. But did you know that reading aloud to a child can actually improve the foundational structure of that child's brain?

At this year's event, featured speaker Dipesh Navsaria, MPH, MSLIS, MD, will give an inspiring presentation on the neuroscience and human physiology behind early childhood literacy programs and how physicians, parents and communities can mitigate the effects of adversity and poverty on the developing brain, leading to improved lifelong health and well-being.

Doctor Navsaria is an assistant professor of pediatrics, director of advocacy training and director of the MD-MPH Dual Degree Program at University of Wisconsin School of Medicine and Public Health. He also serves as medical director for Reach Out and Read Wisconsin, an evidence-based program that works through clinics to promote early literacy.

We invite you and your guests to an evening of discovery and wonder as you explore your own universe of possibilities!
